Low-molecular-weight heparin (LMWH) is a class of anticoagulant medications. They are used in the prevention of blood clots and treatment of venous thromboembolism (deep vein thrombosis and pulmonary embolism) and in the treatment of myocardial infarction.. Heparin is a naturally occurring polysaccharide that inhibits coagulation, the process that leads to thrombosis.

Review question. Is the incidence of heparin-induced thrombocytopenia lower in postoperative patients receiving thromboprophylaxis with low molecular weight heparin in comparison with patients receiving unfractionated heparin?. Background. Heparin is a natural agent used to prevent clot formation in the vessels.

Heparin is a naturally occurring anticoagulant produced by basophils and mast cells. In therapeutic doses, it acts as an anticoagulant, preventing the formation of clots and extension of existing clots within the blood.

INTRODUCTION. Heparins, including unfractionated heparin and a variety of low molecular weight (LMW) heparin products, are used extensively as anticoagulants.

The heparin anti-Xa assay is based on the ability of heparin to inhibit the activity of activated factor X (Xa) in the reagent. The reagent includes excess antithrombin, making the heparin in the sample the rate-limiting reagent for Xa inhibition.

Heparin is a naturally occurring linear polysaccharide that shares chemical and structural similarity to heparan sulfate, a cell surface proteoglycan that provides the natural anticoagulant surface activity of the vascular endothelium. Unlike heparan sulfate, heparin is largely intracellular, within the granules of mast cells.

Introduction. Heparin-induced thrombocytopenia (HIT) is a potentially life-threatening immune complication that occurs after exposure to unfractionated heparin (UFH) or, less commonly, to low-molecular-weight heparins (LMWHs). 1 It is characterized by declining platelet counts beginning 5 to 14 days after heparin exposure and occurs in isolation (isolated HIT) or concurrently with new arterial ...
